Master in Human Resource Management (MHRM)

Learners in the Master in Human Resource Management (MHRM) program adopt international management practices on human resource that can enable them to champion a culture of innovation in their organization. With a duration of just less than two years, the program is designed for company decision-makers who prioritize immediate and practical application of up-to-date HR functions taught by industry HR professionals and foreign visiting professors.

The program flowchart is modular and classes are typically held on Friday evenings and Saturdays. Learners are given the option to take either the thesis-research or the Capstone project track on the culmination of the program.
Master of Science in Tourism and Hospitality Management (MSTHM)

The Master of Science in Tourism and Hospitality Management (MSTHM) Program is DLS-CSB’s response to the emerging need in the country to train professionals into becoming critical decision-makers, who have strong foundations in the business and science of tourism and hospitality, as well as strategic development competencies in food products, travel and service industries.

The program offers 18 units of core courses, followed by 12 units of subjects from their track of specialization, and 6 units of electives. The culminating requirement is a choice of either 6-unit writing a thesis, a strategic management paper, or rendering internship with case study.
